give consumers who have been sold items in their home a period of time in which to cancel the contract.

He proposed a change in the present law in the case of door-to-door sales. This is to prevent the door-to-door operator from convincing the unwary customer to buy a negotiable instrument to pay for faulty merchandise.

Emberton

Emberton said the measure must contain workable and effective provisions for its enforcement.

And, third, "because of businessmen's reputation, consumer and credit legislation must contain safeguards protecting the consumer business community from the abuse of ineffective enforcement and unwarranted allegations of illegal practices."
