'No Chance' Given 78 Trapped Miners

By James A. Hight

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Today's prospects dimmed late Monday for the 78 men known to be trapped deep in a smoke-filled coal mine.

The miners are believed to have died about six hours before an underground explosion and fire that killed two men and injured 66.

Twenty-one other miners, working in distant sections, managed to escape to the surface without injury. They were waiting in the hospital and were not expected to return to work for at least three days.

"There's not a chance in the world they're going to live," said a rescue official at a command post near the scene.

Gov. Deukmejian was in the area yesterday for a meeting with the family of Jack Kapples, rescue commander; and was said to have been searching for survivors since the explosion.

Deukmejian said the official search for survivors would continue until tomorrow. The mine is 27 miles west of Charleston.

"We will not stop until we find that last fellow," he said.

Mine safety experts said they expected to find the bodies of 100 men where they were trapped.

The blast was caused by a gas explosion in a five-foot diameter coal seam. The gas had entered the mine from a 10-foot seam above it.

The blast was so powerful that it threw miners and equipment 50 feet into the air and blew the roof and side walls of the mine.

"We couldn't get there," said a rescue official.

Deukmejian said that the mine's ventilation system failed during the explosion, but that the men had been able to escape until the explosion occurred.

The blast was about 500 feet underground, 100 feet from the surface.

Rescue crews had been working for 15 hours to rescue the miners, but were unable to find any survivors.

The first rescue was made at 7:15 a.m. yesterday. Since then, the rescue crews have worked continuously, but have been unable to find any survivors.

The rescue crews have been working in temperatures ranging from 120 to 180 degrees, and have been working in an environment of smoke, dust, and fire.

"We're doing everything we can," said a rescue official.

The rescue crews have been working through the night, and have been able to make some progress.

Deukmejian said that the rescue crews have been working with the families of the miners, and have been able to provide some comfort to them.

"We're doing everything we can," he said.

The mine has been closed for four days, and the rescue crews are expected to remain at the scene for at least another day.

The mine is owned by the Consolided Coal Company, and is located near Charleston, S.C.

Problems of Aging
Attention Pressed

A federal official suggested that American women should organize to protest against age discrimination.

There was more of a problem than the usual.

In the previous pages three or more problems were mentioned and discussed.

Among them was the one by the late
